

Re-thinking Italian-American Studies. A National Symposium at the John D. Calandra Italian American Institute

(September 08, 2010)

On Sept. 10-11, the John D. Calandra Italian American Institute of Queens College, CUNY will host a symposium of the current Distinguished Professors and holders of endowed/named chairs whose work has been, to a significant degree, definably part of the field of Italian/American Studies

In light of recent developments-such as those in the state of Arizona-regarding immigration and ethnic studies and their reverberations around the nation, the Calandra Institute [2] sees the need to gather our distinguished professors and holders of endowed chairs who, among other tasks, may also develop and direct programs in Italian/American Studies to discuss their work as it pertains to twenty-first-century Ethnic Studies. In this conversation of the research, education, and programming that subtend Italian/American Studies, the professors will engage in an exchange of ideas that will examine numerous topics, such as:

- The definition of Italian-American Studies;
- The development of the field over the years;
- New methodologies of examining the various modes of articulation of cultural expression;
- The building of national and international networks;
- The relationship between Italian Studies and Italian-American Studies;
- The sharing of resources that would facilitate their work and the work of others dedicated to the study and analysis of Italian America in all of its manifestations;
- The bridging of gaps, such as the proverbial "town-gown" dichotomy, a.k.a., bringing the academy to the streets;
- The relationship between the cultural brokers (i.e., professors, independent scholars, writers, filmmakers, etc.) and elected officials. The goal of this symposium is multifold: (1) to convene leading educators of Italian American culture and society; (2) to examine those debatable issues that surface and thus challenge current representations; (3) to better inform those present about the vastness of Italian Americana; and, (4) in the wake of Arizona Law HB 1070, to discuss practical applications of Ethnic Studies to the further development of Italian American Studies at the college / university level. In addition, this meeting offers to the public the opportunity to hear directly from and engage in dialogue with these intellectual leaders in the field.

The symposium has been organized with the co-sponsorship of ILICA [3] (Italian Language and Inter-Cultural Alliance), NIAF [4] (National Italian American Foundation), NOIAW [5] (National Organization of Italian American Women), OSIA [6](Order Sons of Italy in America), and The Italian Cultural Center of St. John's University [7]

The goal of the event is multifold: (1) to convene leading educators of Italian American culture and society; (2) to examine those debatable issues that surface and thus challenge current representations; (3) to better inform those present about the vastness of Italian Americana; and, (4) in the wake of Arizona Law HB 1070, to discuss practical applications of Ethnic Studies to the further development of Italian American Studies at the college / university level.
